My online dating experiences

I have been a part of a few online dating websites and have some very good advice to offer to those of you new to this, or that are questioning the online dating services. The first advice that I can offer you when subscribing to an online dating website is to always post a picture of you first. I had several people message me to talk, or go out on a date that did not have pictures posted and the reality of it is that all of us want to see a person before we go out on a date.

Posting a picture will get you double the responses that you would get versus not posting a picture. The next advice I can offer is that you must ask the people you are going out with what they want to get out of this dating. Some people are on these free online dating websites to clearly just date and never get serious, and if you seek a long term relationship with someone, you can get quite worn out dating people that have no desire for this. There are some websites that let you classify yourself as dating only, friends only, long term relationships, and I would suggest you select the one you want to have and make sure your date is the same as well. Another piece of advice I can offer is that you never meet a person for a first date at your house or their house.

You should select a place that is familiar to both of you and meet there. If you or your date is not happy, then you both can walk away and have no ties to going home or riding with the other one. Once you give a person your address, they can always have that to come back to, and if you don't get along, that could be a negative thing.
